

A wee film from Canada on Scotland's access rights puts the Park to shame

Description

This lovely positive film <http://www.hakaimagazine.com/video/right-roam> puts Loch Lomond and Trossachs National Park to shame. People are filmed driving to beautiful places and camping by the roadside to paddle on lochs – just as they do in the National Park. A great counter argument to the LLTNPA and FCS who wish to remove roadside camping from access rights <http://www.robedwards.com/2015/11/fury-over-proposal-to-ban-camping-by-roads.html> and to all those negative images the Park produced as an excuse to ban camping by our loch shores. It explains the history too. One forgiveable mistake: they did not need to ask permission to camp. Talking to local people about where best to camp though was fine and a good thing to do if camping near a house. Its interesting what a positive response they received. There are a lot of local people in the National Park who would welcome campers too but their voice has been silenced.
