

Parkwatchscotland – up and running again

Description

It's been a difficult month for parkwatchscotland. I intended to have a bit of break when ski touring in the Dolomites (see here) but following that was responsible for looking after a child for two and a half week during which time our household all got Covid. That left me knackered and blogging was the last thing I felt like doing. A week ago I thought I was all set to go again only to find parkwatchscotland had disappeared from the web.

Having dismissed the possibility of a cyber attack from the Russians or the Loch Lomond and Trossachs National Park Authority, I discovered my web host had transferred servers without informing me. Something that I was then told would take first 24 hours, then 72 hours and then another 48 hours to sort out, eventually took six days as a result of a number of blunders by my internet service provider. I dread to think what might happen if I now tried to exercise consumer choice and move service provider.

Anyway my apologies to regular readers and to all the people who have sent me information in the last few weeks about matters of concern in our National Parks and the continued attempts of public authorities in Scotland to undermine access rights. I hope to catch up and do justice to some of that over the next couple of weeks. Meantime I am off to the Cairngorms for a weekend of running -or trying to run post-Covid – over and through the hills.
